Deadline Set For Canadian Vet Benefits

The final date for Americans who served in the Canadian Armed forces during World War II to file application for Canadian veterans benefits is Jan. 1, 1960.

Veterans Service Officer Bessie D. Slonecker said today it is estimated by the Canadian Government that several hundred eligible Americans still have not filed for Canadian benefits. Some 27,000 Americans served Canada during World War II; 19,000 of them in the Army and the remainder in the Canadian Air Force. The Canadian benefits for which these Americans are eligible are "service gratuities" and "re-establishment credit."

THE FINAL date for making application for a gratuity was Dec. 31, 1954, except for those veterans who served outside the Western Hemisphere and who were unable to apply before that date due to exceptional circumstances.

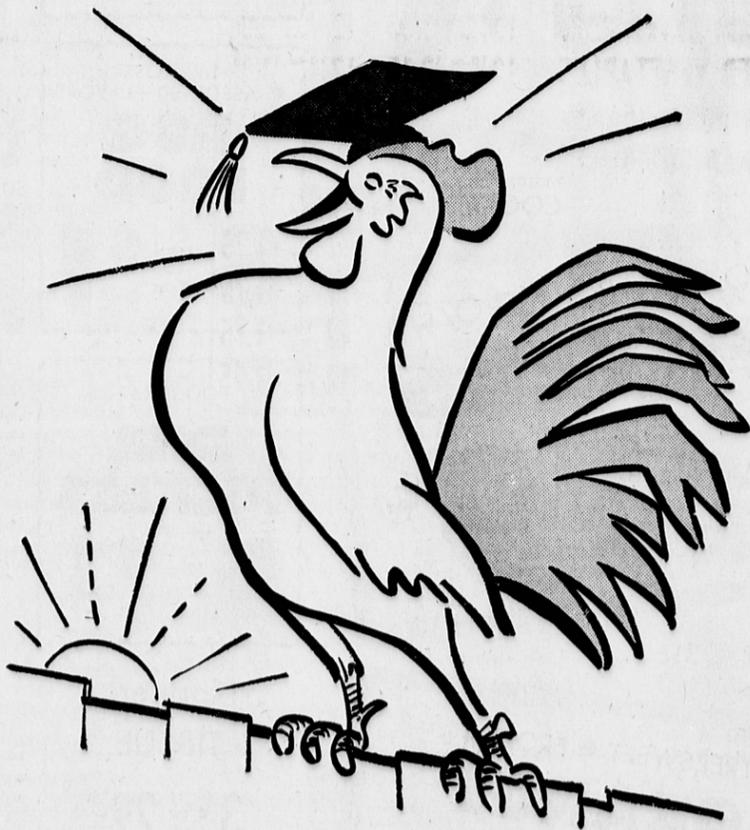

Veterans of the Canadian forces living in the United States may use their re-establishment credit only for the purchase of veterans' insurance in Canada. The policies are issued to eligible veterans without medical examination in amounts up to $10,000.

A FORMULA of $7.50 for each day of service, with an additional 25 cents for each day overseas is the formula for re-establishment credit. The amount of credit to which an American is entitled would be put toward his Canadian insurance policy.

The only exception to the Jan. 1, 1960, deadline would be if the 15th anniversary of the Veteran's discharge from the Canadian forces falls on a later date.

Further information is obtainable from the Veterans Service Office at 1622 Gramercy Ave. or by writing the Director General, Veterans Welfare Services, Department of Veterans Affairs, Ottawa, Can.
